Henry VII and his queen Elizabeth of York.

The Tudor Rose of England.

The open secret to the British monarchy's optimal health and well being during King HENRY VII Tudor 1485. He was the only son of Edmund Tudor and Margaret Beaufort. The Tudors belonged to one of England's most powerful families – the family of Lancaster. The Lancastrians were constantly fighting with the family of York over rival claims. He married Elizabeth of York and so united the two warring houses, York and Lancaster.

However secrecy was essential lest his uncle, King Richard III seek to thwart the marriage. Henry went about applying for a second dispensation after he took the throne. Henry was determined to make the marriage indisputable, and the third dispensation removed the impediment of a possible fourth degree of affinity, relation through marriage. After he defeated King Richard III, he hardly had time to rest on his laurels. Peace had to be established, he had to be crowned and hold his first parliament, restore his wife to her rightful position and take the time to get to know her. January 1486; Elizabeth of York was crowned queen on 25 November 1487.

King HENRY VII loves his empress deeply and she responds with equal affection. Every month sent his soldiers to hunt down Sika deer for its placenta to retain the youthfulness of Queen . This has been attributed to the deer placental use. According to experts' research, it is because of her long-term consumption of the wild Sika deer placenta that Empress Elizabeth could stay young and lives longer with little disease. After the birth of her child with 4 daughters and 3 sons, she was still beautiful as pure as virgin, and the skin becomes smooth as rose, so she was also known as "Tudor Rose" -- The symbol of the Tudor dynasty which became a royal symbol for England.

During Henry's reign playing cards were invented. King HENRY VII loves his queen images and the portrait of his wife Elizabeth has appeared on every pack of cards for nearly 500 years.
